TEXTO 1

01 SACRAMENTO, CALIF. (REUTERS) –
02 Thursday, September 2nd, 1999.
03 California schoolchildren will no longer
04 learn their classroom lessons by counting
05 M&M's, calculating the cost of Nike tennis
06 shoes or pondering the benefits of Gatorade
07 drinks.
08 Under a new law signed by Gov. Gray
09 Davis Wednesday, product logos and brand
10 names will be banned from textbooks in 11 California – the first state in the nation to act
12 against overt advertising in schoolbooks.
13 The law prohibits product references in 14 textbooks bought with state money, unless 15 the state education board finds they are 16 needed for educational purposes or if they 17 appear incidentally in illustrations or pictures.
18 "I don't think our children should be 19 subjected to needless advertising",
20 democratic Assemblywoman Kerry Mazzoni,
21 the bill's author, said in a telephone
22 interview.
23 Mazzoni introduced the bill after a parent
24 approached her about his child's math
25 textbook, which was filled with references to 26 products such as Gatorade drinks, M&M
27 candies and Oreo cookies.
28 One math textbook, for example, asked:
29 Bob is saving his allowance to buy a pair of 30 Nike shoes that cost $68.25. If Bob earns
31 $3.25 a week, how many weeks will he need
32 to save?"
33 "That is very typical of one example," she 34 said.
35 Most of the product examples were found
36 in word problems in books at a wide range of 37 levels, Mazzoni added. The state Board of 38 Education has had a policy against such 39 references since 1997, but enforcement has 40 been lax.
41 Although the publisher maintained it used
42 the product examples to make lessons more
43 relevant and did not receive money for 44 including them, Mazzoni said textbooks were 45 no place for advertising – whether intended
46 or not.

Couple Sells Ads to Pay for Wedding

01 Monday, August 16, 1999 (Reuters) – Talk
02 about a marriage of love and money.

03 Tom Anderson and Sabrina Root paid for 04 their $14,000 wedding this weekend by
05 selling advertising space at the ceremony
06 and reception.

07 Everything from the wedding rings to a
08 week at a penthouse in Cancun, Mexico,
09 were donated after Anderson got 24
10 companies to sponsor the nuptials in 11 exchange for having their names appear six
12 times from the invitations to the thank-you
13 cards.

14 Anderson, 24, a bartender, spent his own
15 money for his wife's $1,400 engagement ring
16 while Root, 33, a hair stylist, paid $1,600 for 17 the dress.

18 The groom got the idea of corporate
19 sponsorships while working in a small
20 struggling animation studio that often had to 21 barter for services.

22 "So I was in a sales mode, and I got to 23 thinking", he told the Philadelphia Inquirer,
24 which ran a photo of the couple sitting among 25 their corporate-sponsored wedding "gifts" in 26 its Sunday edition.

27 The bride's perfume came from a local
28 distributor, and coffee was provided gratis
29 from a neighborhood supplier.

30 Advertisers had their names appear on the 31 invitations and thank-you cards, on cards at 32 the buffet, on scrolls at the dinner table, in an 33 ad placed in a local independent newspaper
34 and in a verbal "thank you" that followed the 35 first toast.

36 The Inquirer said the groom had bought
37 two addresses on the Internet's World Wide
38 Web, namely: sponsoredwedding.com and 39 weddingssponsors.com.
